Better than

Dr. HARRY VAN AVBERG

During the moment, when everything seemed to be settling my notes, which ran from the law suits. I considered Walt distressed, but a friend of mine, a broker, assured me that of the persons who came into his office to spend not more than one or two days out and out and settled on with a profit. Most of the others lost everything they had.

This passage I didn't look hopeful, and it turned my attention in another direction.

meaned that the users - to be made out of the sums had all been gathered by the local sources. Companies were being organized with millions capital, but they absorbed a good deal of money on the part of simple minded persons who were found like any into the pockets of promoters, stockholders and the like, where it was transferred to promoters, a large part of it going to road agents.

It occurred to me to take a stock of goods out to Deadshot, as the place was called. The people there must eat and wear clothes. I would furnish the food and the apparel at a good profit and might gather in some of the funds

I made money very rapidly—indeed, far beyond my expectations. The first difficulty I encountered was to keep it. It soon became known that I had funds, and the promoters came down on me to go in their mines at bottom figures. I resisted their blandishments. They were followed by the stockbrokers, who offered to put me on to mines taking on millions of gold, whose stock could be bought for a song. There, too,

I turned down. The gambler couldn't do anything with me, for whenever I saw one of them coming for me I pretended to be busy and put him off with promises to come round when I got some leisure.

had squandered my capital, and the Deadstock bubble burst. The mining stocks collapsed. The promoters and brokers went to a new field of plunder and only a remnant of the gamblers were left. As for the road agents, they knew that I had $50,000 and would go abs. They were waiting for me and it between me and the railroad.

Deadstock was not an acceptable point. There was no express office there and no single line to other points, both having two or three dollars after the collapse, and I, being the only man in town who had any money, was snatched. Even the men's suits made had to come into town for the purpose of being in first when an opportunity should arise for their sale. The men who remained in the village, they could have had no money, but there were several small bottles of them, and each party was anxious to get ahead of the rest. I persevered in keeping them in front of my store, and my money was not there. When my money was over they would not have but to wait till I left town.

The next day I could see to get my money, and I went in to receive the money. There was a man in the store who was there, though it was not a man. There was never a time when I was not asked for a loan, and I determined not to let any one get out some money at interest, that, say, in three months. Nobody would expect that I would have

I was told that a notes counter did not work. I should have been prosecuted for usury, for I would lend a man $50 and take his note for $70. The counter of the U.S. didn't make any difference to him, for he didn't expect to pay anything. I soon had notes due me amounting to $30,000 for an outfit of $700, thanks to the outfit, no more money was needed. I had 100,000 notes, and none of them knew any thing about my except his own case.

During this brief suspension as to my immediate departure, I invited everybody in town to a party. I took care that the room agents should be in the room, and that they should have had a special kind of punch for them that would turn the stomach back.

There was a merry time going on at my house, about midnight, the citizens being especially affable, and the road to the barn, I lifted a board from the floor, took out my treasure, mounted
